PER CURIAM:

Ralph T. Byrd was convicted on three counts of contempt of court. The district court sentenced him to six months of probation and home confinement and forty hours of community service. He appeals, challenging the denial of his motion for a jury trial and arguing that he was denied a fair trial in the selection of the judge to preside over his trial.

We have reviewed the record and the briefs filed by the parties and we find no reversible error. Specifically, we find that Byrd was not entitled to a jury trial under either the Sixth Amendment or pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 402, 3691 (2012). Additionally, we conclude that there is no merit to Byrd's claim of a denial of a fair trial by the assignment of the case to the district court judge. See Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 531 (1927) (finding no need for recusal and no due process violation where allegation of bias is "remote, trifling, and insignificant"); United States v. Cherry, 330 F.3d 658, 665 (4th Cir. 2003) (applying objective reasonable person standard to determination of whether recusal is required). Accordingly, we affirm Byrd's conviction and sentence. We dispense with oral argument because the facts and legal contentions are adequately presented in the materials before this court and argument would not aid the decisional process.
